

ATTRACTIVE BOOKLET FOR HYDE MEMORIAL

Carries Appeal for Public Aid in Opening Home to Crippled Children

An attractive booklet titled "When Can They Enter" has just been issued by the Pine Tree Society for Crippled Children and described through pictures and text the Hyde Memorial for Crippled Children, the former John S. Hyde estate given to the Society by the heirs of the late Mr. Hyde.

On the cover is sketch of the magnificent brick mansion with two crippled children waiting at the gate of the beautiful grounds in a pose of happy and anxious anticipation. The title in hand lettering "When Can They Enter?" is inscribed on the green background of the cover.

The first page is devoted to the answer to this question and a challenge. Operation of the Home will be possible through the generosity of Maine citizens by their contributions and that is the challenge. Will they accept the responsibilities by gifts in seeing that the home with all its facilities is able to open and open soon. There are pictures of the swimming pool, the rooms, the elevator which will transport crippled children to and from upper floors, the spacious grounds, the green house and many other features.

A brief outline of the history and purposes of the Society and a list of officers complete the booklet.
